LEONARDO DA VINCI SAVES THE WEST

It was on a Thursday morning that Indian Agent Ben Webber heard the news. The Indians on the reservation had come to get their rations for the week. One of the redskins who had been to the mission school informed him of the event.

"Chief Thunder Bird no longer here. He and five braves go away. There be big trouble soon."

Ben Webber was intelligent enough to realize he had probably heard the understatement of the year. There would be much more than big trouble in the West. For Chief Thunder Bird was the only redskin capable of uniting the various dissatisfied Indian tribes into a fighting unit. When Colonel Edward Redlick had defeated Chief Thunder Bird at the Battle of Deep Creek, the redskin had meekly surrendered.

"We can never win when you send more and more soldiers to fight us."

He and about two hundred of his tribe were taken to the Mescalero Reservation. At the end of five months the famous Indian warrior came to a decision. He called a secret meeting of his few trusted followers and spoke to them.

"Once we were free. We roamed upon our ponies and fought as we should. The buffalo on the plain were plenty. They gave us our food and shelter and even our weapons. Now we are prisoners. We must take what the white man offers. We shall ride to where our free brothers still defy the conqueror. The land will be ours once more."

However only these five braves went with him. The rest of the Indians preferred to follow the sage advice of Big Wing. He had been to Washington and shown many things by the army.

"They have big boats. Like house on house," he told the braves when he returned. "Steam comes from big pipe. It makes boat go. They have wagons. Big iron horse with smoke pulls the wagons. They have many soldiers. More soldiers than Indians on the plains. I see many things. They have schools. They will give us schools. We must learn to be farmers. This country belongs to all of us. We must shed no tears for yesterday. The day when pride was measured in taking scalps is gone forever. We must follow the laws of the white man. This country belongs to all of us."

There were those who might have wanted to go with Chief Thunder Bird. But they knew that Big Wing was correct. The old way of fighting was gone. Peace must be made to last forever, but outside the reservation things were humming with deadly activity. The tribes were holding a joint meeting in Penshaha Valley. The camp fires burned brightly and Chief Thunder Bird spoke to the assembled elders in whose hands were the decisions to be made.

"We have guns and bullets. We have bows and many arrows in our quivers," half shouted the Indian chief. "We have many horses. Right now the white settlers flee in terror. We do not kill them. Our enemy are the soldiers. Only Fort Henderson is in our way. Once we destroy it and all the soldiers in it, we will be masters of the land. We must fight in my way."

There was much discussion. Chief Danomio wanted one point cleared up before he would give his assent.

"Major Dalton brave man at Fort Henderson. He has good fighting soldiers. They have good guns. What we do? Many of us die if we go charging at fort."

Chief Thunder Bird had been expecting that question and was ready with the answer.

"But he does not have many soldiers. Not many bullets for guns. We stop supply wagons from East. We cripple fort. Then we attack."

Major Walter Dalton was well aware of the dangerous position of his command. At present only the existence of Fort Henderson stopped the collected Indians from crossing into the cattle country. The supply wagons had not arrived. He figured his surmise was sound: They had been attacked and destroyed by the Indians. He had sufficient food and water. Bill Anderson, the contractor, and thirty of his men had finished laying the iron water pipe that brought a steady stream of pure fresh water from the creek. The men were trapped in the fort.

"You can't leave," Major Dalton told them. "You would never get back alive. Your safety is my responsibility."

"So we'll stay here and help you fight, smiled Bill Anderson. "After all, I'm an old army man myself and most of the boys with me have seen fighting during the War between the States. Some on opposite sides. But now we'll be together."

Yet Major Dalton's biggest headache was over his daughter Annette. She should have fallen in love with an army man, but instead she had to go back East and return with Leonardo Da Vinci Lane. The fellow was a sculpture and a painter. All he ever did when not at his art was to talk about Leonardo Da Vinci."

"My mother was an artist," he would tell the soldiers. "My father is a banker. So I worry not for money. I spent Three years studying in Italy. I want to be like the great man, Leonardo da Vinci. He was an engineer also."

It seems that "Leo" as the soldiers nicknamed him was busy making pictures and figures of soldier life in the Far West. And Annette was very happy. When married they would travel abroad and meet other artists.

"I know I am breaking the family tradition," she told her father. "My great grandmother started it when she married a soldier. Then grandmother and mother carried on the tradition. I love him deeply and he loves me."

Old Dave Perkins was one of the few scouts left at the Fort. He was something of a lone wolf and preferred to work by himself. He came back with some startling news for the major.

"They are three days riding from the fort. Never saw so many injuns in a lifetime. They will wipe us out."

The gravity of the situation was not concealed from the soldiers. If only they had reinforcements.

"A couple of cannons would do the trick well," sighed Captain Herman Luden. "For three years I was in command of artillery. Some genius ought to invent light cannons. We need them."

"Leonardo Da Vinci," interrupted 'Leo,' "is the man who actually worked out construction diagrams. I could built those cannons for you. Don't worry."

The captain didn't worry. He knew you had to have a foundry to cast those cannons. "Leo" went to speak with Bill Anderson.

"We take a twelve inch section of pipe," he explained. "We thread one end and then cap it. Drill a touch hole. We then mount this light cannon on wheels or even on a tripod. We have barrels of extra gunpowder here. We use bolts, nuts, and iron slugs. Let's start making those cannons now."

Bill Anderson opened his mouth to pass a remark about artists sometimes living in clouds. But the way "Leo" spoke was most convincing. In fact, the artist quickly drew a rough construction diagram.

"Who am I to say no?" admitted Bill Anderson. "After all what have we to lose? Only our lives. Maybe we can make military history with those cannons. Go ahead and build them."

When the first five were finished, Major Dalton became aware of what was happening. Captain Herman Luden told him the news.

"I will have to do some quick training. Because in about forty-eight hours we can expect the attack. They are sending up their smoke signals."

A dozen more cannons were made and mounted. They were placed outside the fort.

"Half fire. Then half reload. Then half fire," said "Leo" who somehow had by tacity consent taken charge of his homemade artillery. "We cover the cannons with branches and leaves until the enemy is within range."

Chief Thunder Bird rode at the head of the charging Indians. Onward and onward they rode in full glory and majesty. They seemed so certain of victory when it happened! There were terrific roars. Like Thunder Birds when angry. Horses reared and riders fell to the ground. There was confusion. Again the small Thunder Birds roared. At the same time the soldiers behind the protection of the walls of the fort were acting as sharpshooters.

There could only be one sensible interpretation of the event. Somehow the fort had received reinforcements. They who were going to trap others — themselves had been trapped. So they all turned and fled — except one. Chief Thunder Bird was smart enough to know he was finished. He couldn't go with the redskins. Perhaps once again the white soldiers would show understanding and mercy. He remained on his white hore and surrendered.

"It's fantastic but true," said a perplexed General Louis K. Monter. "Cannons made by Leonardo Da Vinci saved the West. Is Major Dalton proud of his future son-in-law. Apparently Colonel Lane did not tell his future father-in-law of his wonderful career as an army engineer. Didn't want to let him know he outranked him. We better call him back to service again. We have to do this in order to give him those military medals."

WESTWARD The OREGON TRAIL

S1340

When eastern states grew constantly more crowded, hardy pioneers moved ever westward! Word came of the great possibilities of fur trading in Oregon! Thus the Oregon Trail was established! After the discovery of gold in California, hundreds of thousands started each spring along the Oregon trail to the west!

Thousands never reached the west coast! Many died of disease and many were slain by hostile Indians who resented the white man's encroachment upon what they considered their own land!

Along the grave-strewn Oregon trail the dauntless men and women inched their way westward! If they had started too late snow sometimes increased their hardships before they arrived! In time people abandoned Oregon as their destination and branched southward into California! Nevertheless, the way was still called the Oregon trail and was our first great highway to the west!

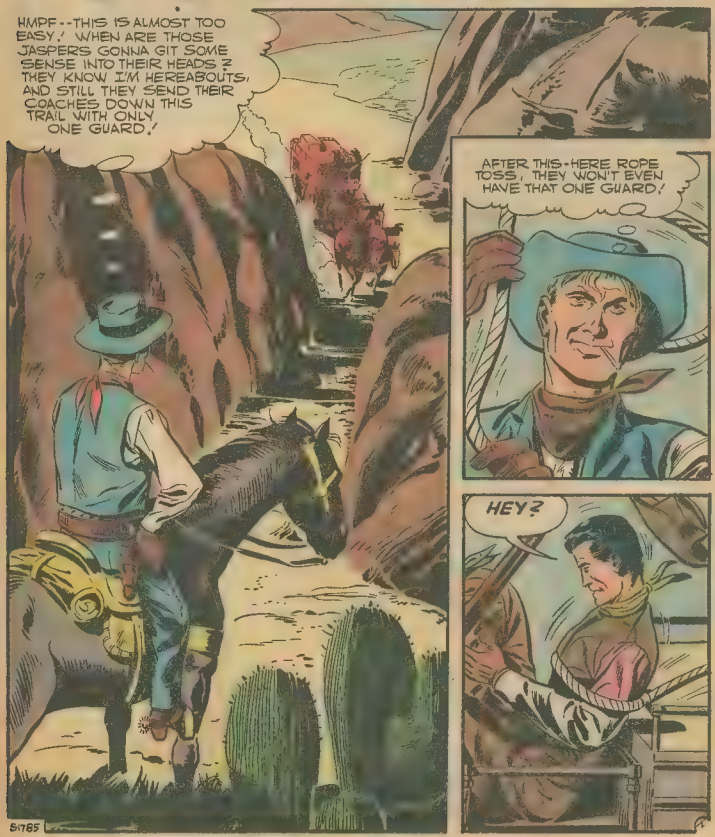
I VOWED I'D EVEN THE SCORE, SHERIFF.' HE MADE SURE I KEPT IT.'
END

JEB MULLER WAS A HARD-BITTEN BADHAT... A ROAD AGENT WORKING BY HIS LONESOME, WHO HAD HELD UP ONE STAGECOACH AFTER ANOTHER ! AND UPTILL NOW, HAD ALWAYS MANAGED TO EVADE THE CLUTCHES OF THE LAW --

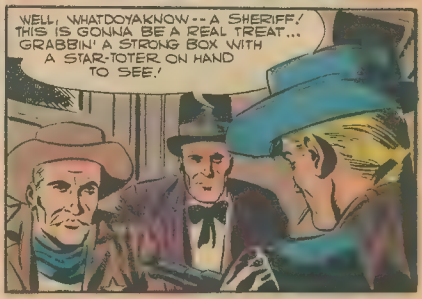
TOO EASY



HMPF--THIS IS ALMOST TOO EASY ! WHEN ARE THOSE JASPERS GONNA GIT SOME SENSE INTO THEIR HEADS ? THEY KNOW I'M HEREABOUTS, AND STILL THEY SEND THEIR COACHES DOWN THIS TRAIL WITH ONLY ONE GUARD !
AFTER THIS-HERE ROPE TOSS, THEY WON'T EVEN HAVE THAT ONE GUARD !
HEY ?

WHOOAAA-UP! OR THIS PERSUADER OF MINE'LL GO INTO ACTION!
JEB MULLER!

PILE OUT, EVERYBODY--AN' MAKE SURE YOU'RE ALL GRABBIN' AIR!



WELL, WHATDOYAKNOW--A SHERIFF! THIS IS GONNA BE A REAL TREAT... GRABBIN' A STRONG BOX WITH A STAR-TOTER ON HAND TO SEE!

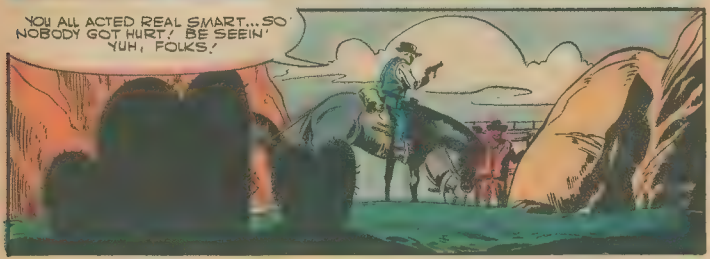
SHERIFF--ARE YOU JUST GONNA STAND THERE? AREN'T YOU GONNA DO SOMETHING?
WHAT CAN HE DO?

HE KNOWS HE CAN'T CROSS JEB MULLER AND EXPECT TO STAY HEALTHY! HE KNOWS WHAT'S HAPPENED TO OTHERS WHO TRIED! DON'T YOU, SHERIFF?

YOU HAVE THE STRONG BOX, MULLER--WHY DON'T YOU GIT MOVIN'?
THAT'S JUST WHAT I AIM TUH DO... AFTER...

...AFTER SPOOKIN' ALL YOUR HORSES--SO NONE OF YUH CAN COME AFTER ME!

THAT DOES IT FINE! HMPF-- THIS JOB WAS ALMOST TOO EASY



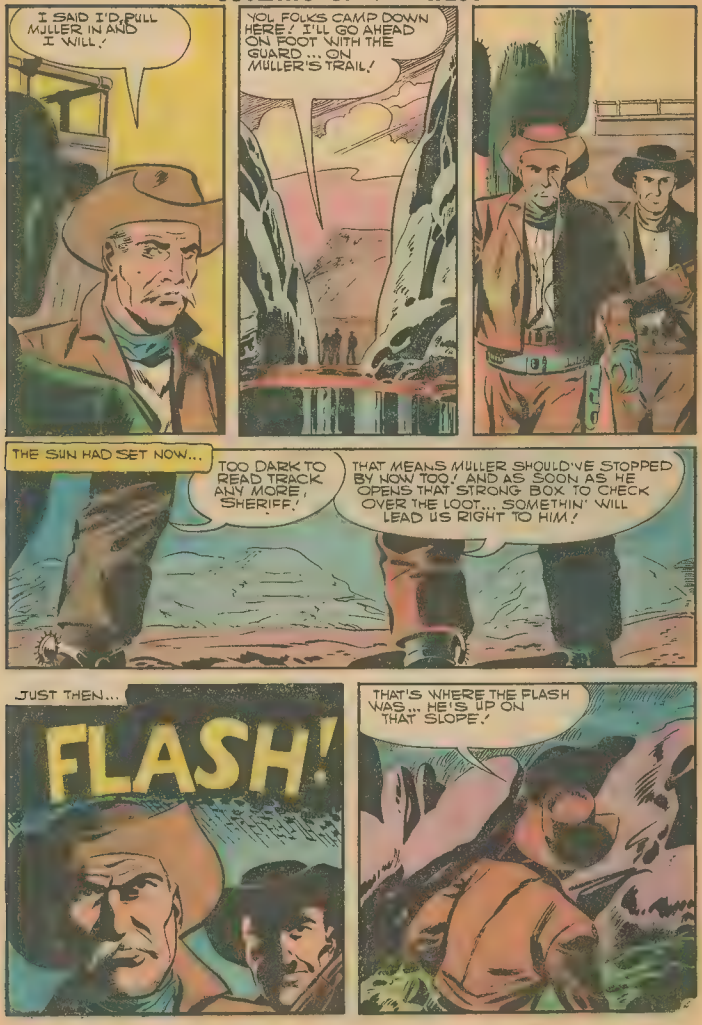
YOU ALL ACTED REAL SMART... SO NOBODY GOT HURT! BE SEEIN' YUH, FOLKS!

NOBODY GOT HURT... THAT'S WHY THOSE BADHATS RUN WILD OUT HERE THE WAY THEY DO! IF A SHERIFF WON'T EVEN LIFT A FINGER AGAINST THEM!

WHEN WE REACH TOWN, I'M GIVIN' YOU MY WORD, JEB MULLER WILL BE WITH US... AND HE'LL BE HOG-TIED TOO!

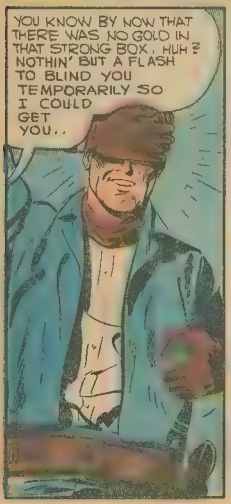
YOU BEEN CHEWIN' LOCO WEED, SHERIFF? HERE WE ARE, STRANDED WITH-OUT MOUNTS, AND...
...AND PULL REIN ON YOUR PATIENCE, MISTER!

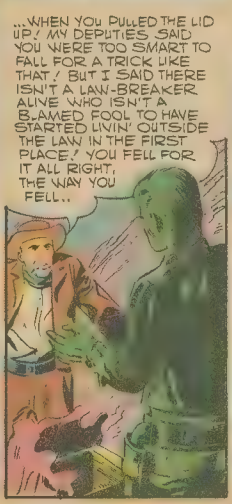
OUTLAWS OF THE WEST



I SAID I'D PULL MULLER IN AND I WILL!
YOU FOLKS CAMP DOWN HERE! I'LL GO AHEAD ON FOOT WITH THE GUARD ... ON MULLER'S TRAIL!
THE SUN HAD SET NOW...
TOO DARK TO READ TRACK ANY MORE, SHERIFF!
THAT MEANS MULLER SHOULD'VE STOPPED BY NOW TOO! AND AS SOON AS HE OPENS THAT STRONG BOX TO CHECK OVER THE LOOT... SOMETHIN' WILL LEAD US RIGHT TO HIM!
JUST THEN...
FLASH!
THAT'S WHERE THE FLASH WAS... HE'S UP ON THAT SLOPE!

OUTLAWS OF THE WEST

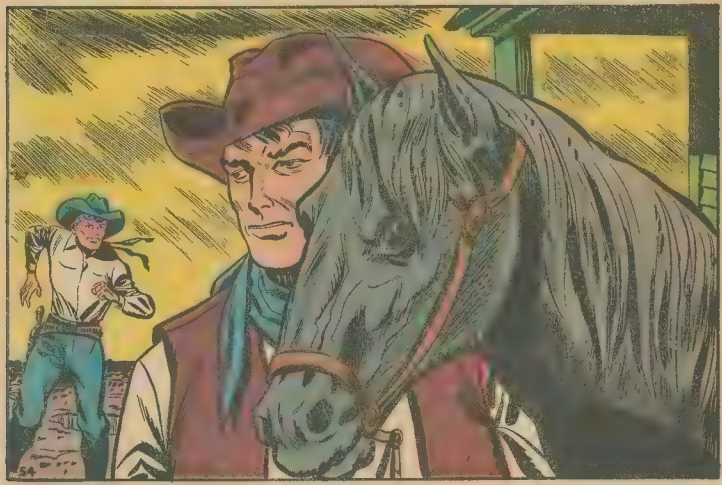




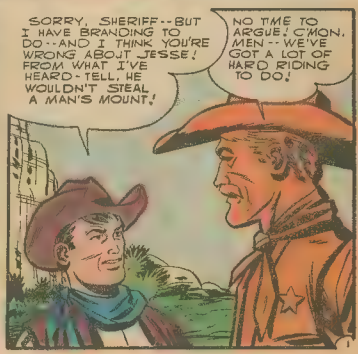
...WHEN YOU PULLED THE LID UP, MY DEPUTIES SAID YOU WERE TOO SMART TO FALL FOR A TRICK LIKE THAT! BUT I SAID THERE ISN'T A LAW-BREAKER ALIVE WHO ISN'T A B-AMED FOOL TO HAVE STARTED LIVIN' OUTSIDE THE LAW IN THE FIRST PLACE! YOU FELL FOR IT ALL RIGHT, THE WAY YOU FELL..

JESSE JAMES WAS LIVING PEACEFUL-LIKE NOW, RANCHING LIKE MOST EVERYBODY ELSE, GOING UNDER THE NAME OF HOWARD! AND WHEN JESSE HUNG HIS HOLSTERED SIX-SHOOTERS ONTO THE WALL, HE WAS PLUMB SURE HE'D HAVE NO NEED OF THEM FOR A LONG TIME! BUT HE HADN'T RECKONED WITH...

THE SQUIRT WHO CALLED HIMSELF JESSE JAMES



YOU RIDING WITH US, HOWARD? JESSE JAMES IS BACK IN THESE PARTS! HE STOLE JUDGE COTTRELL'S HORSE, AND LEFT A SASS-NOTE! I AIM TO PUT HIM AWAY FOR GOOD!



SORRY, SHERIFF--BUT I HAVE BRANDING TO DO--AND I THINK YOU'RE WRONG ABOUT JESSE! FROM WHAT I'VE HEARD-TELL, HE WOULDN'T STEAL A MAN'S MOUNT!
NO TIME TO ARGUE! C'MON, MEN--WE'VE GOT A LOT OF HARD RIDING TO DO!
